Welcome to “Eagle Snag Trail” at the Citrus County Central Landfill. Please sign in and out at the landfill office whenever you visit our site. During Saturday hours, please use the log sheet located outside of the office door.

Restroom facilities and water are located in the office. Access to the restrooms on Saturday is on the right side of the landfill office.

The map on the back shows the birding trail, general access areas of the landfill and areas for which there is no public access for safety reasons. The birding trail is approximately 2 miles long; much of it is a dirt trail, which should be accessible in all but extreme wet weather.

There are two distinct habitats represented on this trail, including the forest that surrounds the landfill property on the east, south and west (part of the Withlacoochee State Forest), and the waste disposal area that attracts scavengers. You can reliably spot gulls, crows, and vultures in the landfill area any day. During the fall, winter and spring months, bald eagles frequent the site as well, often perching in the dead “snags” at the edge of the forest waiting on a meal. Full-grown juveniles are the most common, but white-headed adults can also be seen. Other species that have been spotted on this site include red-wing blackbirds, finches, jays, cardinals, bluebirds, grackles, hawks, and woodpeckers. This list grows as we have more people watching, so please feel free to share your sightings with us.
